

Boston's 12 Most Anticipated Restaurant Openings of 2015

By Scott Kearman
January 6, 2015

It's a new year — which means a whole new slew of restaurants are ready to start sprouting up. Though there will inevitably be many more exciting new ventures to present themselves over the next few months, as 2015 gets underway here are a few impending openings we're already excited to see.

Tasting Counter

Restaurants like Menton, Asta, Journeyman and the just-opened Study have proven that there's a place for tasting-menu-focused dining in Boston. Next up: this experiential, awesome-sounding concept from chef Peter Ungár, previously of Boston's late, esteemed Aujourd'hui and the Michelin-starred Paris restaurant Le Grand Véfour. Ungar's restaurant, housed in the same Somerville building as Aeronaut Brewing Company, will offer a three-course tasting menu for lunch and a nine-course tasting menu for dinner. (Think scallop with pomelo, preserved lemon and avocado cream, pictured at top, or miso-cured hake with grapefruit and roe, pictured above.) There will be just 20 ticketed seats available per meal. Prices will range $150-$180, inclusive of tax, gratuity and beverages, which will include sake, all-natural wines, and beers from Aeronaut. The intimate dining area will face an open kitchen, so guests can see the meal prepared from start to finish, and returning guests can create online profiles with information on dietary restrictions and preferences to help shape future menus. When: April.